PALATINE GROUP RELEASES VERSION 3 OF “THE PROJECT MANAGEMENT EXPERIENCE” SIMULATION SOFTWARE

New York, NY November 24, 2004 — Palatine Group, Inc., recognized as a forerunner in the use of simulation software in business training, is pleased to announce the release of Version 3 of The Project Management Experience software. The simulation exercise is used to train project managers at Fortune 100 companies and government agencies how to steer their complex projects towards success.

The Project Management Experience simulation software is a highly robust and richly detailed simulation of project planning and execution. The simulation places the user in the role of manager of a technical project, complete with people, vendors, customers, tasks, technical and human resources problems, and other challenges faced in the real world. Users are forced to re-think their approach to management in order to guide the project to a successful conclusion. Version 3 of the software adds new dimensions of realism to the simulation model, new opportunities to engage in managerial decision-making, and a more engaging and graphically rich user interface.

“Our goal has always been to deliver the very best in project management understanding and training to our customers. The new version of our software extends this commitment to excellence and points the way towards richer and more robust training experiences,” said Palatine Group CEO Lawrence Suda.
